Please note: A rather peculiar situation arose in a previous trial that bears some explanation. During the day of the trial a dog was pulled from a class (let's say htad sheep). The same dog (or another dog, same handler) was added to a different class (let's say htad ducks). In this situation there was no refund made and the handler was asked to pay for the new entry. The reason this was done, and will be done in the future, is that the dog that was pulled from the first class could have been replaced by a new entry if the pull was done prior to the closing date to fill the class. In the simpler case, if one dog was pulled from a class and replaced by another dog (same handler) in the same class then this would be treated as simple replacement and no funds would be involved. Thanks for your understanding.
